

ABOUT THE CONTRIBUTORS

Marco Armiero (Ph.D. in Economic History) is a Senior Researcher at the National Research Council, Italy. After two short periods of research at the University of Kansas and Brown University, in the last years he has been working at the Program in Agrarian Studies, Yale University, at the Environmental Science, Policy and Management Department at UC Berkeley, and at the Bill Lane Center for the Study of the North American West, Stanford University. He has written two books and several articles on the environmental-social history of natural resources, on environmental conflicts, and on environmental historiography. With Stefania Barca, he is the author of the first Italian university textbook in environmental history, Storia dell'ambiente. Una introduzione (Roma: Carocci 2004). In English, he has published several essays and edited the book Views from the South. Environmental Stories from the Mediterranean World (19th -20th cent.), (Napoli: CNR, 2006). He is especially interested in the relationships among social history, environmental history, and political ecology. Naples is his home town.

Nancy Bouchier and Ken Cruikshank are members of the Department of History at McMaster University. They are currently working on a SSHRC-funded social and environmental history of Hamilton Harbour/Burlington Bay. With the support of the Wilson Centre for Canadian History, they recently wrote and narrated the documentary film, The People and the Bay: A History of Hamilton Harbour.

Jim Clifford is a PhD Candidate (ABD) in the History Department at York University. He is currently working on a dissertation on the environmental and social history of the Lower Lea River Valley and West Ham. He is one of the organizers of the September 2008 symposium, "Active History: History for the Future," at Glendon College in Toronto.

Wilko Graf von Hardenberg holds a post-doctoral fellowship in history at the University of Trento (Italy), funded by the Provincia Autonoma di Trento. He received his PhD in geography from the University of Cambridge (UK) in 2007 with a dissertation entitled "Fascist Nature. Environmental Policies and Conflicts in Italy, 1922-1945."

Peter A. McCord earned his Ph.D. in American History from the University of California, Riverside in 2003, and he also holds an MA in Economics from the University of Wisconsin, Madison. He has taught World and American History and conducted research at a variety of institutions, including the University of Redlands and the University of Nebraska, Lincoln. Currently he is a Visiting Assistant Professor at the State University of New York at Fredonia, where he continues to research the history of environmental and political thought.

Paolo Pelizzari is now doing a PhD in the history of institutions and society in contemporary Europe at the University of Milan (Italy). He graduated in contemporary history at the University of Florence (Italy) and worked then as researcher for the Istituto Storico della Resistenza in Toscana and for the Casa della Memoria in Brescia (Italy).

Catriona (Cate) Mortimer-Sandilands is Canada Research Chair in Sustainability and Culture in the Faculty of Environmental Studies at York University. She is completing a project on the intersections of sexual and environmental history, which will also include a monograph on Canadian lesbian writer and activist Jane Rule (1931-2007).
