

Contributors

Cynthia Comacchio teaches history at Wilfrid Laurier University. Her book "Nations are Built of Babies": Saving Ontario's Mothers and Children, 1900-1940 will be published by McGill-Queen's University Press this fall. Her work has appeared in various journals, including the Canadian Historical Review and the Journal of Canadian Studies.

Richard Greeman is a veteran socialist and radical activist. He is currently working on a biography of Victor Serge, four of whose novels he has translated into English (Writers and Readers Publishing Co.). He teaches French at the University of Hartford in West Hartford, Connecticut.

Roberta Hamilton teaches in the Department of Sociology at Queen's University. She is currently working on a book that provides feminist perspectives on Canadian society.

Craig Heron lives and works in Toronto. He is known for his articles and books on Canadian working-class history and for his apple pies.

Paul Kelley is a doctoral candidate in the department of History and Philosophy at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education where he is working on a study of Walter Benjamin.

David Kimmel is a doctoral student in History at York University. His work has previously appeared in Dimensione Europea, Ontario History, and most recently Labour/Le Travail.

Bryan D. Palmer wears his hair long and his tolerance for academic fashion short. He teaches comparative labour and social history at Queen's University, and is the book review editor of Labour/Le Travail. His most recent books are Descent into Discourse (1990) and Working-Class Experience (1992). Currently at work on studies of Upper Canada in the 1830s, the American Trotskyist James P. Cannon, and image and ideology in the corporate invasion of an eastern Ontario town, he has vowed that his written commentary on poststructuralism is now terminated.

Catriona (Kate) Sandilands is a doctoral candidate and course director in the Department of Sociology, York University. Her dissertation is on feminism and ecology.