

Contributors

James Doyle is a professor emeritus of English at Wilfrid Laurier University in Waterloo, Ontario. He has published five books and many articles on Canadian and US literature. His articles on Canadian Communist writers have appeared in Canadian Literature, Canadian Poetry, and Essays on Canadian Writing.

Bryan D. Palmer teaches in the Department of History, Queen's University, edits the journal Labour/Le Travail, and is currently writing a biography of the founder of American Trotskyism, James P. Cannon. His article on noir is part of a larger forthcoming study entitled Dark Cultures: Histories of the Night.

Barrington Walker is a doctoral candidate at the University of Toronto. He is currently finishing a thesis on racialized and sexualized constructions of black men and women in nineteenth and twentieth century Ontario criminal trials.