

Contributors

Tom Behan, the fact he survived an earthquake in Naples, conservative Thatcherism in Britain and Labor Party Thatcherism in Australia gave him the resilience and political understanding necessary to get on top of The Camorra (Routledge 1996). This article is a broader version of the concluding chapter of The Long Awaited Moment: The Working Class and the Italian Communist Party in Milan, 1943-1948 (Peter Lang 1997). He now works at the Italian Department of the University of Kent at Canterbury.

Karen Dubinsky teaches history at Queens University.

Franca Iacovetta is at the University of Toronto. Her recent projects include Teaching Women's History: Challenges and Solutions (with P. Draper and R. Ventresca); and On the Case: Social History and Case Files Research (with W. Mitchinson). At the University of Toronto Press, she is co-editor of Studies in Gender and History (with Karen Dubinsky) and Studies in Social History (with Craig Heron). She is writing a book on social experts and immigrants, and (with Donna Gabaccia) a volume on Italian working women in the diaspora.

Linda Kealey, a specialist of women's and labour history, is Head of the Department of History at Memorial University in St. John's Newfoundland. Her publications include numerous articles on Canadian radical women and A Not Unreasonable Claim: Women and Reform in Canada; Beyond the Vote: Canadian Women and Politics (with Joan Sangster) and Pursuing Equality: Historical Perspectives on Women in Newfoundland and Labrador. She is co-editor (with Keith Walden) of the Canadian Historical Review.

Rick Kuhn is a senior lecturer in the Political Science Department at the Australian National University, where he teaches Australian political economy, German and Austrian politics, and classical Marxism. Class and Class Conflict in Australia, edited by Tom O'Lincoln and Rick Kuhn, was published in 1996. At present Rick is working on a biography of Henryk Grossmann and a history of the economic thought of the Australian left. His political practice is shaped by a commitment to international socialism and he is a union militant.

Lynne Marks teaches history at the University of Victoria. She has published on various topics within women's history and gender history. Her latest publication is Revivals and Roller Rinks: Religion, Leisure and Identity in Late Nineteenth Century Small Town Ontario (University of Toronto Press 1996).

Ian McKay teaches history at Queen's University. His recent publications include Quest of the Folk: Antimodernism and Cultural Selection in Twentieth-Century Nova Scotia (1994) and For a Working-Class Culture in Canada: A Selection of Colin McKay's Writing on Sociology and Political Economy, 1897-1939 (1996).

Tom Mitchell works at Brandon University. He has published a number of papers dealing with themes in labour history, social history and the history of education. His research and writing during the past few years has been preoccupied with the crisis affecting Canada following the Great War. He is very fond of Antonio Gramsci.

Joan Sangster is Professor of History and Women's Studies at Trent University, Peterborough, Canada.